Cover: Transfer decorated creamware cup fragment, c.1810-30 - Archaeology Laboratory, University of Toledo. In 1977, archaeologists from the University of Toledo discovered the remains of an early, burned log cabin and its contents not far from the foot of the Maumee River rapids. The artifacts, when coupled with historical evidence collected over the next thirty years, eventually revealed the history of Port Miami, one of the Maumee Valley's earliest settlements. See Patrick Tucker and David M. Stothers, "The Amos Spafford Farm and the War of 1812 in Ohio: A Case of Historic Memory Loss."
